He's a nice guy, but he also hasn't really adapted to canvas. You will want to buy and comprehensively read the textbook proactively to get the most out of this course. Otherwise, you are basically playing roulette with your grade; you will have an A until the final exam.

Dont take. Very unorganized, there has been multiple occurrences of him just randomly creating group assignments and only giving you one day to complete them, this class already has a lot of work on top of trying to coordinate with your group of 4+ members in such a short time frame. Lectures are even worse, zero value to the students.

insanely disorganized class: the first group project was due 3 days after it was assigned with randomized groups and no time to in class to coordinate or find group partners rambley lectures and dense readings. avoid if possible.

He is a nice person, but his lectures are barely coherent. If you take him, prepare for lots of self-studying. However, he is lenient on grading, which made the class slightly more tolerable. The content itself is also bad and unrelated to CS, but he didn't make it so I won't give him too much flak. One of the better options, unfortunately.

30% of your grade based on randomized group members (mock trial), and 20+% on TAs grading your writing. Not much learning went on imo. Lectures were hard to follow, TONS of dense readings that didn't stick, trial preps felt like busywork. Final was ok, but lots of writing. Felt so unrelated to CS.

Lectures are very unhelpful, unengaging, and lack any preparation or visual aid (but attendance is required). Assianments are unorganized and hard

I'm not a huge fan of the mock trial/group project, he made it a lot more approachable/fun. There is a bit of reading to be done. but it was manageable.

Chill and easy class. Mock trials are simple once you start. The professor is relaxed even if you use notes. Assignments have long deadlines. Quizzes are corrected in class for easy points. Attendance matters. Book not needed. No midterm, just a final
